

Bring Wildlife Into Your Life!

As disappearing habitats and other human-induced pressures threaten species in the wild, the care of animals in captivity becomes more critical. The Friends of Fantasy Farms Animal Preserve are guardians of captive wildlife populations, maintaining the health and well-being of our animal charges.

What goes into the care of animals in the Preserve? The answers lie somewhere in the wild. The best way to care for animals in captivity is to understand the biology of the species in their natural environments, to understand behavior and physical adaptations, diet specifications, and social and space requirements.

At Fantasy Farms Animal Preserve, we attempt to create an environment that will support the animals' growth and development. Animals are managed in as natural of a setting as time and space allow. The more support we receive from the Friends of Fantasy Farms Animal Preserve, the better we are able to match their physical and societal norms to their surroundings.

At the Preserve, routine husbandry may include shifting animals from one area to another, separating animals from each other, and working with the animals so that they tolerate close visual inspection by keepers and treatment by veterinarians.

Reproduction management depends on a thorough knowledge of not only reproductive physiology but of reproductive behavior and mating system. Procedures for introducing animals for reproduction or adding individuals to social groups are carefully tailored to reflect natural behaviors.

Physical characteristics of the captive environment are also critical for success. Specific ambient temperatures ranges are required for each species. Other physical aspects of the enclosure that are critical include the space available, the lighting, and the "furniture" within the enclosure (such as climbing structures, boxes, trees, or other physical barriers allowing for isolation).

Successful animal care practices have been developed through years of experience and collaboration between staff at the Fantasy Farms Animal Preserve and researchers studying the animals in the wild. The greater our funding through the Friends of Fantasy Farms Animal Preserve, the better we are able to take care of our charges.
